In fact the Maltese traditionally abstain from eating sweets and sometimes meat during Lent, especially on Good Friday. The festival, the origins of which date back to before the arrival of the Knights of St John in 1530, acquired its name from the bonfires that used to light up the festivities in Mdina and Rabat. Today, the feast is marked by various events at Buskett gardens. Families and friends gather at this open air venue, Malta's largest natural woodland area, for a picnic which normally carries on into the evening. The traditional rabbit dish and wine are at the top of the day's menu, accompanied by the singing and music of local folk bands. Maltese Traditional Religious Feasts

June – August – Around the islands

Malta's main religious denomination is Roman Catholic, and hence religious celebrations are a core part of the Maltese eventing calendar. The months of July and August are 'full of bursting' with parishes celebrating their respective patron saints. This is the time of year we fondly call the 'festa' season. Every town and village celebrates in a similar manner, with both indoor religious functions and outdoor festivities. The latter are the more secular aspect of the feasts, with ground and air fireworks displays, band marches and revelry. Churches are decked out in the parishes' finest: drapes, silver and all sorts of ornamentation dazzle the eye during the village 'festa'. Processions with the iconic statue meander through village streets decorated with lights and beautiful banners – 'pavaljuni', accompanied by bands and devotees. Villagers make sure that their homes are in best possible shape for this special occasion, as oftentimes the village 'festa' brings guests and extended family to their doors. No summer in Malta is complete without a visit to one of these colourful, exuberant and yet holy celebrations.

Christmas and New Year's Eve in Malta & Gozo

25.12.2010 – 06.01.2011 – Around the islands

Malta is a country with very strong religious traditions, and at Christmas-time this becomes even more evident in the numerous events and celebrations which take place across the country. The main focus is religious, though the secular aspect increases year on year. Many villages have street decorations as well as large, life-size cribs. Churches are brightly lit and decorated to highlight the joy of the season. Many villages host crib exhibitions, with cribs of all sizes and materials on display, with the ever-increasing popularity of mechanical cribs making these exhibitions a unique experience. The high point of the Christmas season is definitely midnight mass with the traditional sermon recited by a young child. Christmas fairs are increasing in popularity and here one can enjoy festive music, food and entertainment for all the family. These events bring together the religious and secular dimensions of Christmas. Like many countries Malta also has seasonal food especially sweets; 'Il-qagħaq ta' l-għasel' are an old favourite: honey rings filled with mouth-watering fruit-based honey, 'l imbuljuta': deliciously stewed chestnuts to warm you up.

On New Year's Eve, Malta and Gozo offer a very diverse entertainment programme which should suit all kinds of tastes. Activities range from lavish gala nights with the very best Maltese and continental cuisine to top musical acts in and around various venues in the Islands. Certainly, when it comes to welcoming the New Year, Malta pulls out all the stops especially thanks to our vibrant and exciting Mediterranean character.
